

REQUIEM FOR A SCENE

BORDERS WON'T STOP
THESE FOREIGNERS

WORDS JEREMIAH J. SHAW

ALIENS VS. PREDATOR: REQUIEM

opens nationwide on Christmas Day, and ENVY had the opportunity to sit down with the two stars of the upcoming film and discuss the movie, their future plans, the joys of killing small children, and Sigourney Weaver.

Technically no journalists were harmed during the course of this interview. However, Jeremiah has since locked himself in the ENVY broom closet and refuses to come out until we've brought him acid-proof armor, a flamethrower, and several med-packs.

ENVY: I'm sure you're really busy promoting the new movie, so I'd like to thank you both for your time. First off, who would really win in a fight between you two?

ALIEN: Gee. You know, we've never, ever been asked that question before... (sighs)

PREDATOR: Yeah, you couldn't have started off with something a little more novel? Like, "pirates or ninjas?"

ENVY: Touché. I'll remember that. So tell us about the new film then.

ALIEN: I kick his ass in it.

PREDATOR: Actually we can't go into too much detail, but we can say that it takes place shortly after the last film ends. But this time it's set in a small Colorado town.

ALIEN: Kind of like South Park ... but with better CGI.

ENVY: Are you happy about the director choice of the Strause Brothers?

PREDATOR: Of course. To be honest, we really weren't fans of how Paul [Anderson] portrayed us in the last film. But Greg and Colin have been awesome throughout this
